The College of Social Work and Community Development (CSWCD) traces its roots when Social Work became an academic sub-unit in the Department of Sociology and Social Welfare, College of Liberal Arts in 1950. In 1961, the College of Liberal Arts launched the Department of Social Work in recognition of the increasing demand for social work and community development professionals. In 1965, the passage of RA 4373 established the Bachelor of Science in Social Work as the educational requirement for the practice of the profession. The passage of RA 5174 in 1967 established the Institute of Social Work and Community Development (ISWCD) at UP, providing funds for a separate building. It also gave birth to the Department of Community Development. ISWCD was reclassified as the full-fledged College of Social Work and Community Development in 1987. CSWCD's commitment to marginalized women and their communities gave birth to the inclusion of a graduate degree program in Women and Development Studies in 1989, which in 2001 became the Department of Women and Development Studies (DWDS). In 2009, the Doctor of Social Development program was instituted and welcomed its first batch of students.

CSWCD has three academic departments, namely the Department of Social Work (DSW), Department of Community Development (DCD), and Department of Women and Development Studies (DWDS). DSW and DCD both offer undergraduate and graduate degree programs, while DWDS offers only a graduate program.

These programs are designed to develop students into effective social development practitioners so that they will be able to assist people in transforming themselves into a participating citizenry imbued with a strong sense of identity, community, and national purpose. The programs provide knowledge and skills in social development and also strive to develop a pro-people and pro-poor orientation among students. These are further strengthened through supervised fieldwork, an essential component of the training for all undergraduate and graduate students of CSWCD.

PROGRAMS OFFERED

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT (DCD)

The Department of Community Development offers the following academic programs:

- 1) Bachelor of Science in Community Development (BSCD)
- 2) Diploma in Community Development (DCD)
- 3) Master of Community Development (MCD)

The Bachelor of Science in Community Development (BS CD) program aims to develop/produce graduates who are equipped with core knowledge and competencies, skills and attitudes to engage in community development work that promotes people's participation and empowerment, gender equality and sustainable development.

BSCD offers a total of fifty-seven (57) units of general education courses and eighty-one (81) units of disciplinary courses for a total of one hundred thirty-eight (138) units. The BSCD curriculum is divided into three (3) clusters designed to attain the objectives of the program. The first cluster includes courses on perspectives and theories on community development. The second cluster focuses on methods and skills in community development and is further divided into three (3) sub-clusters to emphasize competency building in the areas of community organizing and capacity-building, participatory planning, project development and management, and community development research. The last cluster covers the field practicum designed to immerse graduating students in actual challenges of community development-community organizing work and other practice-based features of the curriculum. As a curricular feature of the discipline, fieldwork integrates and synthesizes the theory and practice of people-centered and community engaged scholarship, a distinguishing character of community development as an academic program and a profession.

The graduate curricula in Community Development are post-baccalaureate academic programs designed to develop advanced knowledge, skills, and attitudes necessary for professional quality participation in the conceptualization, development and management of participatory, gender responsive, sustainable, and empowering Community Development programs as well as in working effectively with women and men in various groups, organizational, and community settings. With the increasing number of schools and organizations offering courses in Community Development, the graduate program also prepares students to teach the discipline in both formal and informal educational settings.

The Diploma in Community Development (DCD) is especially designed as an intermediate program to upgrade professional training and experience in community development.

The Master of Community Development (MCD) is designed as advanced professional education in Community Development with three areas of study namely: Community Organizing and Capacity-Building Practice, Community Development Planning, and Community Leadership and Organizational Development. Two tracks are offered: Plan A—with thesis but no comprehensive examination; or Plan B—without thesis but with comprehensive examination.

DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL WORK (DSW)

The Department of Social Work offers the following academic programs:

- 1) Bachelor of Science in Social Work (BSSW)
- 2) Diploma in Social Work (DSW)
- 3) Master of Social Work (MSW)

The Bachelor of Science in Social Work (BS SW), a four-year course, is designed to prepare students for responsible entry into the human services. It provides the students an education for beginning competence in professional social work practice. It prepares students for direct practice in social work with individuals, families, groups and communities. The BSSW curriculum consists of sixty-six (66) units of general education courses and seventy-four (74) units of professional courses which cover four (4) curricular areas: human behavior and social environment; social welfare policies, programs and services; social work practice; and field instruction.

The Diploma in Social Work program, which seeks to respond to the demand for higher level competence in direct practice and supervision among practitioners, will essentially follow the thrust of the MSW program.

The goal of the MSW curriculum is to prepare students for leadership in social transformation and human development through policy advocacy and development of innovative practice models. The Department sees the importance of developing among its students the necessary competencies for advocating policy changes and building innovative practice strategies at whatever level or area of practice they may be in, whether micro or macro. This redefined thrust will enable the students to hone their knowledge and skills in integrative social work practice which is responsive to changing global and national realities.

The MSW program will have these basic curricular areas to enable students to have a holistic perspective of social work practice: Core courses in social work; Social policy advocacy; and, Integrative social work models. Two tracks are offered: Plan A – with thesis but no comprehensive examination; or Plan B – without thesis but with comprehensive examination.

DEPARTMENT OF WOMEN AND DEVELOPMENT STUDIES (DWDS)

The Department of Women and Development Studies offers two graduate degree programs:

- 1) Diploma in Women and Development
- 2) Master of Arts in Women and Development

The Department of Women and Development Studies, which is the only one in the Philippines and a pioneer in Asia-Pacific region, aims to provide a historical and comprehensive perspective to the study of gender and development particularly in the context of the South and the Philippines.

The diploma program is designed as an intermediate program for individuals interested in women and gender studies as an academic discipline which relates theory to practice, and which brings them in contact with development practitioners and exposes them to actual field experiences. Students may proceed to the MAWD program after completion of the diploma program.

MAWD provides advanced training for women and gender advocates, educators, development practitioners, and other interested individuals—both women and men—aiming to be better organizers, educators, trainers, researchers, project and program planners and managers, policy formulators, and extension workers by situating their activities in the context of feminist and development theories. Two tracks are offered: Plan A—with thesis but no comprehensive examination; or Plan B—without thesis but with comprehensive examination.

DOCTOR OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM (DSD)

The Doctor of Social Development (DSD) emphasizes praxis-oriented learning and theorizing from the ground as bases for the enrichment of teaching, scholarship, research, and practice in social development. It transcends disciplinary boundaries by taking the individual, the family, the community, organizations, and the larger society as the focal points for the analysis of development issues, and the fulcrum for programs and interventions aimed at the attainment of total human development. It seeks to integrate trans-disciplinary perspectives, methods, and approaches from the various physical, biological and social sciences, management sciences, the arts and the humanities, in order to better comprehend the holistic yet diverse nature of the development phenomena.

The DSD covers three major areas of studies: social development direct practice; social development planning and administration; and social development studies. The program is concerned with the analysis, reflection, formulation, and implementation of participatory processes in development strategies and responses to promote human rights and attain social justice, gender equality, and people's empowerment. It will address, identify, create, and replicate approaches and methods that enhance the capacities of vulnerable sectors to be active agents in development that includes: poor women, children and the youth, the elderly and the disabled, indigenous people and gender minorities, and other disadvantaged or marginalized groups.
